

Support Your Dogs Vision Through Proper Nutrition and Vitamin Supplementation

How do you choose the right dog vitamin out of the overwhelming selection of dog vitamin products that are on the market? Researching the ingredients used in the different dog vitamin products can help to narrow your search. Generally speaking, you should select a dog vitamin product that will improve your dogs quality of life and increase life span. The best dog vitamin product is one that has been prepared with natural, human grade ingredients, follows the latest nutritional guidelines and has the approval of the veterinary community.

Low grade, commercial dog food contains certain additives and preservatives that act like toxins in your dogs body. The right dog vitamin product should include vitamins that function as antioxidants to combat the effects of these substances. The toxins could cause long term damage to your dogs system and trigger the development of serious health issues.

Lets take a look at dog vitamins that address a specific issue, such as age related vision problems. Dogs experience an aging process that is similar to ours and triggers similar health issues. One of these issues involves vision deterioration. Vitamin A is essential to good vision health and may reduce the incidence of cataracts, so be sure to look for a dog vitamin product that contains plenty of this vitamin. Vitamin A and its precursor beta carotene are both super antioxidants that destroy carcinogens and boost immune function.

Vitamin B complex (which includes folic acid) and B2 (otherwise known as riboflavin) are important to eye health, but Vitamins C and E, combined with Vitamin A, are the real powerhouses when it comes to your dogs vision problems. A powerful antioxidant, Vitamin C protects the other antioxidants and stimulates the immune system through the production of antiviral substances and white blood cells. It fights the effects of free radicals and lowers the risk of cataracts. Vitamin E is also a powerful, free radical fighting antioxidant that works in concert with Vitamin C to support your dogs vision health.

You can slow your dogs aging process and keep her in top condition through proper nutrition, lots of exercise and a dog vitamin that contains essential vitamins and minerals designed specifically for older dogs. Feed your companion a diet consisting of chemical free, human grade ingredients and supplement that diet with dog vitamins that support the immune system, and you will be providing your dog with the best possible defense against the development of vision problems.
