

The How to of Bridal shower invitations

A guide to Bridal shower invitations The day before every wedding is the bridal shower and it is more or less the second most important event in any womans life after the wedding itself. If not anything, it is an excuse for the girls to gather together and have a fun evening and take some steam of right before the wedding and keep everyone in a fun mood. There are presents to be opened and fun to be had. Economy in mind, the shower may be engulfed in grandeur or kept simple. It is a chance for the maid of honor to make it a memorable evening of unbridled creativity.

The mood, theme and guest list for the bridal shower is to be decided upon by the organizers before the invitations are sent out. Flowers need to be ordered, music has to be chosen and favors selected and that by no means is an easy task. Mostly, bridal shower ideas will comprise a theme that will be carried through from the venue to the food and everything in between. Bridal showers are usually afternoon tea on the weekend wherein the guests are dressed up and is as though it is a wedding rehearsal by itself. The general mood of the shower should correspond with the brides personality and interests and only the closest person can get it right.

Sending out the invitations too late or too early could be fatal; guests might have other plans or may just forget about the event all together. Keeping all that in mind, its good timing to send the invitations 2 to 3 weeks in advance Youll give guests time to clear their schedules and find that perfect gift and its not so far in advance that they will forget about the Shower.

The general rule is each adult should be sent their own invitation, however, if youre including the men and hosting a couples shower, you would send one invitation to the couple. Two females living in one residence get an invitation each. If the bride is having another shower, try to stay away from inviting the same guests. If you must overlap the guest lists to avoid offending anyone, be sure to let the overlapping guests know that you dont expect them to bring ANOTHER gift, that you would simply enjoy their company.

For the invitation, go with the theme of the bridal shower. You can purchase online, use the ideas and get a few of the guests together to make your own, or get some ideas before heading out to the store.

All this done and crossed off your checklist, you are all set to make it a memorable evening.
